1: Burrows--102 (1947-48) Woleaians
587 Ifalik

"When a man dies, his brother may marry the widow. But this practise (the levirate), is not required or regarded as particularly praiseworthy. My data do not show how prevalent it may be. Given the excess of women over men and the fact that polygyny, though said to be permissible, is not practised, many widows do not remarry."

2: Damm et al. --78 (1909) 1938 Woleaians
116, 587 Ifaluk

The interval between the death of one spouse and the next wedding of the surviving partner can be 2-3 months, or only 1/2 - 1 month; the widower or widow determines this according to the affection he feels for the dead spouse.

4: Krämer--110
116, 587

(1909) 1937

Woleaians
Lamotrek

Thus all relationships in the sense of blood relations are matrilineal. According to Cantova... the levirate does occur.